Myson Heats New Homes

Myson, the leading name in heating technology, is providing the warmth for a new homes development in the Midlands.

Perfection Homes' Riverview development, on the banks of the River Wye, comprises 23 luxury apartments in the heart of Hereford. Myson's Underfloor Heating (UFH) systems were selected to be installed throughout 18 of the properties.

Homes on the development will also benefit from radiators from Myson's décor range.

Consisting of both new build and conversion properties, Riverview includes one, two, three and four bedroom apartments, designed to meet modern, stylish, lifestyle needs and benefiting from secure gated parking.

Myson UFH is an efficient way of heating a home, in terms of savings on both cost and space. It is a cost-effective warm water heating system, incorporating energy efficiency and high performance, utilising a low water temperature of between 35° and 55°C, which usually results in fuel savings.

These low water temperatures allow the UFH system to be environmentally friendly.

The systems are installed by Alan Berry Plumbing and Heating.

Barry Lynch, group product manager at Myson, said: "Perfection Homes are providing Hereford with a high quality development in Riverview and by selecting Myson UFH and Décor products for the heating, they are choosing quality in their efforts to make these properties as comfortable a place to live as possible.

"The use of both UFH and radiators is a wise choice and recognises the fact that heating products are not a 'one or the other' option; quite often you get the best results from a mix of complementary appliances, as is the case here."
